

College of Business Scholarship awarded to Phillip Trujillo

The College of Business has awarded the Tom H. and Edith Redington Memorial Scholarship to one of its most outstanding students, Phillip Trujillo, a junior majoring in Business Management with an emphasis on Leadership and Human Resources.

Mrs. Tom H. Redington established the scholarship through the estate of her husband to help New Mexico State University students meet their full potential. The scholarship varies in amount each year, but is awarded to a student that has demonstrated scholastic achievement and is actively involved in university and community affairs. Students are asked to submit their resumes and a letter stating their accomplishments and contributions to the university.

Trujillo remarked, "This scholarship is a huge honor and I cannot express my gratitude enough toward the Redington family for their generosity. I am the first in my family to ever attend college and would not be able to be at NMSU without this scholarship."

The College of Business at NMSU works diligently to ensure each student can grow in and out of the classroom. There are opportunities for students to demonstrate what they learned and apply it to a work setting. Developing students in a rich learning environment challenges their minds to delve outside conventional paradigms.
